This publication presents a concise statement of the base means practised by the Jacobins of the United States to asperse the characters of those persons who are considered as hostile to their disorganizing schemes. It also contains the correspondence between Mr. Hamilton and Messrs. Monroe, Muhlenburgh and Venable, on the subject of the documents aforesaid, and a series of letters from James Reynolds and his wife to Mr. Hamilton, proving beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the connection between him and Reynolds, was the result of a daring conspiracy on the part of the latter and his associates to extort money.

New-Theatre,

December 11, 1797.

THE MANAGERS particularly request the concurrence of the public in the abolition of a custom, which has hitherto obtained, of giving away or disposing of RETURN CHECKS at the Theatre.

They are aware that gentlemen are unconscious of any wrong done to the interest of the institution by this practice, from a general, though mistaken idea that Checks are the representatives of a right to so many seats in the Theatre, during an Evening's Entertainment, and transferable at will; when in fact, they were never intended as more than tokens by which the Door-keepers are enabled to ascertain with the least trouble to the parties, that they themselves have been before in the Theatre, or paid for their admission.

Independent of the injury the Managers sustain, such a practice encourages a croud of idle boys and other disorderly persons to surround the doors of the Theatre, to the corruption of their morals and the great annoyance of the Audience.

It has also been the source of two evils of no inconsiderable magnitude; one is, that sometimes very improper company is by these means admitted; and the other, that owing to Checks passing into dishonest hands, they have been frequenaly counterfeited to a Large amount for the purposes of Sale.

This statement will, it is respectfully hoped, induce the Public to discourage such a traffic: and the exertions of the Managers will, if thus assisted, easily prove adequate to its entire abolition.

MUSIC.

J. L. LENZ,

Teacher of Vocal and instrumental Music,

RETURNS his sincere thanks to the Ladies and Gentlemen, from whom he received a very liberal encouragement since his residence in this city, and respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that, in consequence of the request of some of his friends, he has opened a Musical School at his house in Spruce Street No 174, where he will teach on the Piano forte, Violin &c. &c.—He deems it unnecessary to enlarge upon the advantages the learner will derive from an institution of this kind; he will only say, that attention and zeal are much excited in an assembly, where numbers are in pursuit of the same object. His arrangement is such, that an interference of the the different sexes will be avoided. Those Ladies and Gentlemen who cannot make it convenient to attend at his school, he will wait upon at their houses.——Applications will be thankfully received at his house, where his terms and further particulars may be known.

CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY—DECEMBER 14.

Continuation of the Debate on the subject of Foreign Coins.

Mr. HAVENS thought the report of the committee was somewhat inconsistent, as it proposed crowns, &c. should pass at their full value at the custom-house, yet expected them to depreciate, and by that means get to the bank. Besides, said he, their not being a legal tender, will not depreciate them; for it was not one payment in ten thousand in which it was necessary to make a legal tender: it was seldom, that a creditor was compelled to receive a debt; creditors were every where ready to receive their money generally before their debtors were ready to pay. Banknotes were not a legal tender in any parts of the United States, yet there was no difficulty in passing them. If a creditor were offered current money, he would not care any thing about its not being a legal tender; but, if a legal tender were required, it would be an easy matter to procure money which was legal for that which was current. The inconvenience which had been complained of, from the depreciation of crowns, arose from the alarm which the proclamation on the subject had occasioned; but when that alarm ceased, which it soon would do, crowns would pass as usual. He was warranted in this supposition by the law respecting copper coin, which forbade any copper coin, except cents and half cents, from being circulated, on pain of being forfeited, besides ten dollars as a penalty; yet, notwithstanding base copper coin was every where in circulation. He refered to another law of a similar nature. It was clear, therefore, that coin would not be forced into the mint, except its value was depreciated, which must be effected not only by saying it shall not be a legal tender, but by making it penal to offer it in payment. Besides, if it would have the effect to force the foreign coin into the custom-houses, it would never get into the mint. The coin collected at Boston and other distant ports, did not come to Philadelphia; but, suppose the law fixed the matter so, that such coin should come into the Treasury of the United States, it would not be difficult to shew that it would be impossible for government to put it into the mint to be recoined. He was warranted in this conclusion by the law regulating foreign coin. That act, he said, declared, that all gold and silver coin, except Spanish dollars, and parts thereof, received by government, should not be re-issued, but sent to the mint to be re-coined; yet this law had not been complied with. Mr. H. said, he was on a committee respecting the mint last year, and he enquired of the Secretary of the Treasury why this law had not gone into effect, and he was given for answer, that the mint was in such a situation that it could not give any security that the coin sent there would be re-coined in any reasonable time. Indeed, from what he said, he inferred, that government wanted the money so much, that it could not be spared to go to the mint. To agree to the report, would have the appearance of giving support to the mint; but it would not be really doing any such thing. This was his idea. But if this coin were to go to the mint, where would be the advantage? He could not see any. He believed, therefore, the best way would be to suspend the operation of the act restraining the circulation of foreign coin, and leave the mint upon its present footing until something effectual could be done for its support.

Mr. BALDWIN said, in determining upon the question before them, it was not necessary to examine the principles upon which the mint was established. Supposing all the principles, and the effects supposed to be produced right, the only thing was, they were expected to have been produced sooner than it was now found they were. He could not agree to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He thought they should extend the time of withdrawing foreign coin from circulation for a year or two longer. Nor would he have it supposed from the wish, that he was hostile to the mint: he originally voted for it, and was not now convinced it would not prove eventually advantageous to the country. To give further time for the maturing of this business, was doing no more than they were obliged frequently to do in other business under this government. They were scarcely aware how slowly the laws passed over so extensive a country as ours. He believed the law proposed to stop the circulation of certain species of foreign coin had done some good; but he believed it would have a bad effect, if it were to take place the ensuing summer. He did not believe that the mint establishment had ever before been contemplated for so extensive a country as the United States. In most countries where mints were established, there was, he said, a great mercantile center, which acted like the heart in the human body, to circulate the medium of commerce. In this country the case was different. Some parts of the United States, he said, were almost as much connected with other countries at they were with other parts of our own. In Great-Britain, for instance, when the coin got debased, it was always transmitted to London to be re-coined and new coin could always be received in its stead. But, said he, we must be contented to move more slowly.—In some instances, where mints had been established, there was not so much Bank paper in circulation as in this country, which had been a mean of retarding our progress. He was not, however, for giving up the object, because their expectations had been, in some degree, deceived. He did not think the mint could ever be supported by foreign coin alone; it would be necessary to be supplied with bullion also. Gentlemen had said the effects of our coin had not been felt at all. They had certainly been felt considerably, in some parts. Some valuable plate had, of late been brought to the mint from foreign countries, more than perhaps would be brought in future. But he hoped further time would be given before foreign coin was attempted to be withdrawn from circulation.

Mr. R. WILLIAMS was in favor of postponing the operation of the law; though he could not see so distinctly as other gentlemen the difference between the report of the committee, and the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia. The committee say French crowns, &c. shall be received for revenue, but shall not be a common tender. If the report had made them a tender for all payments under the federal government, he thought the report would have been of equal extent with the amendment; as he supposed congress had not the power of saying what should, or should not be a tender in the several states. He thought he was warranted in this assertion by the constitution, in the 8th section of the 1st article of which it was said, "Congress shall have the power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;" and in the 10th section of the same article, where it speaks of what the individual states shall not do, it says, "no state shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." From these two passages of the constitution, it was evident, that that the individual states might make a tender of what coin they pleased, provided they did it according to the value fixed upon it by congress. So that the difficulty would not be so great as had been imagined, if the law was not postponed, though he thought it ought to be, as it had not been sufficiently notified. Another reason with him for wishing for a postponement was, that if farther time were given, the different states would make their tender laws conformable to those of the United States; if not, they would keep up their present laws and there would be a clashing betwixt them. He professed himself a friend of the mint establishment, as he supposed the principles upon which it was founded were laudable and proper; but he was against carrying any law into effect which should injure the people of the United States.

Mr. GALLATIN said he felt no kind of aversion to the mint establishment itself; he wished to see it well supported with bullion, and of importance to the United States; but he felt some aversion to the expences of the establishment, without any benefit being produced from it. So far as this went, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Otis) might apply his observation to him of "being an enemy to the mint;" yet he thought that gentleman was mistaken in thinking the present question was so closely connected with the existence of the mint. He believed if there were means of making the mint establishment beneficial, they were not those proposed by that gentleman. There were two subjects before the committee; the one to suspend the act altogether, the other to leave it to operate on gold coin only. He believed a single view of the quantity of gold coin issued from the mint since its establishment, would shew the latter to be an improper measure. The whole amount of gold coined at the mint on the 30th of September, 1796, was only the value of 149,445 dollars. When the laws relative to the suspension of the circulation of Foreign coins were passed, it was on the idea that at the time the provisions were to take effect, there would be a sufficiency of our own coin to supply its place. It was clear that this was not the case; and he did not see how a person could be charged with enmity to the mint because he was disposed to allow farther time for its operations. It could not be expected, Mr. G. said, under present circumstances, that much Foreign coin should be brought to the mint, until it were depreciated; therefore, unless the amendment of his colleague went to depreciate it, they could not suppose it would go to the mint. He drew this conclusion from what had already taken place; for out of 10,000 ounces of gold which had been received at the mint, not more than 1300 were in coin. Except Foreign coin was, therefore, reduced to the value of bullion, it would not go to the mint, and it would certainly be unjust to reduce it, whilst it remained in the hands of the people. In relation to Foreign silver coin, a difference of opinion existed whether the law should be wholly or partially suspended as it related to it. In the first place it might be observed, that the proportion which French crowns bore to whole amount of foreign silver coin in circulation was very small, and therefore no great advantage could be derived to the United States from throwing them out of circulation. But, said he, suppose all the French crowns in the United States, were now in the mint, and were to be re-coined into dollars, where would be the advantage? He did not understand that the object of the mint was merely to put a certain impression upon money, but that we might observe a proper controul over our circulating medium, so as to keep it pure. Suppose the proportion of French crowns to dollars, were as ten to one, would not the effect be, that nine-tenths of our circulating medium would still be in Foreign coin? Where then would be the advantage? If the French crowns were debased, there would be some reasons for calling them in, but not otherwise. It might be said it would give employment to the mint; but it would be employment without advantage, which could not be desired. But it had been shewn by the gentleman from Maryland, that if the French crowns were in the banks, it would be impossible to get them to the mint, from the expence of transportation, and the loss which would be occasioned by the absence of the coin from their coffers. There was, in his opinion, a much easier way of replenishing the mint, without encountering any of the difficulties which would attend the forcing out of circulation Foreign coin; it was by making an appropriation of 100,000 dollars for the purchase of bullion, and this was the only way in which it could be effectually done.—But this was not all; suppose all the Foreign coin in circulation re-coined into dollars, What would be the effect? They would be exported by our merchants equally with Spanish dollars, whereas, whilst the silver remained in crowns, they were suffered to remain. Mr. G. said he had already observed, he was opposed to the mint only, if no advantage could be derived from it; and if, after going into the business as far as possible, it was found the establishment could not be of any use, it certainly would be better to get rid of it. But whatever his opinion on this subject might be, it was unconnected with the present queston. The report of the committee on the subject of the mint, recommended an appropriation of money, which was certainly the cheapest way of supporting it. When that report came under consideration, the question would arise whether the establishment was useful, or whether it should be abandoned. He hoped the amendment of his colleague would be rejected, and that of the gentleman from Virginia agreed to.

Mr. OTIS rose to reply, and observed that such arguments of the gentleman last up, as were at all pertinent to the subject would have been more applicable if the original question relative to the suppression of foreign coin were before the committee. But as the law affecting this coin was in actual operation, the true question was whether some of the inconveniences were not past remedy, and whether all these objections would not occur after any limited period. The law had already operated injuriously upon necessitous persons who had been compelled to part with their foreign silver at a discount of ten per cent. It was now accumulated either in the hands of those who had speculated upon their necessities, or of those who had a sufficiency of other kinds of money, and could afford the expence and delay, if any, that would attend the re-coinage; but to suspend the law for two years, would enable those who held this coin to return it into circulation at an advanced rate, among those who had already been compelled to suffer a loss; the inconveniencies would be aggravated, and fall upon the same class of people. Two years hence, there would be more silver in the country, and it would be more remotely diffused with our increasing population. The obstruction of circulation would then affect a larger portion of the community, and every argument would then apply with greater force. If it was true that the French crowns amounted only to a tenth part of the circulating silver; it was a good reason for beginning with the suppression of those; and although a great part of the coin would still be foreign, a gradual reformation would in time supplant it altogether—but if this argument was intended to prove that if foreign coin should not be decried until the mint had coined enough to supply its place; it would follow that the mint should be abolished; for this could never happen; no man acquainted with the nature of money operations could imagine that by this or any other institution a sufficient quantity of bullion could be collected to supplant at once the whole foreign coin in actual circulation. As to the expence and delay attending the transportation of the crowns to the mint, it was true that they would amount to a small deduction from their real value; this must always happen; but this would fall chiefly upon the banks into whose vaults the silver would be collected from the custom-houses, and this would be rendered inconsiderable to those institutions, as large quantities could be transported with a small escort, and they would gladly defray the expence for the sake of having the money pass twice thro' their vaults. Mr. Otis denied that this measure would facilitate the exportation of specie. He did not believe that our dollars would be in greater demand for foreign markets at least for sometime than French crowns; but however that might be, a supply of specie would always be required, and when required it would be procured for foreign markets. If the coin was all of one standard and denomination, no mischief would arise from its exportation.—The demand would be just what it ought to be, and its place would be always supplied with the same kind of coin. It was only while a preference existed in favor of one description of money, that unnatural and forced means were adopted for retaining the money, and thus obstructing the free course of trade.—Nor would this diminish the importation of silver—The real difference between bullion and coined silver was so trifling in most countries, that no reason was to be inferred from the small importations of bullion, that such a decided preference was given to coin because it was current in this country—On the contrary the value of bullion being for the most part superior to that of coin, it was often purchased by the European governments, and a premium was sometimes given for bringing it to the mints—This was the true reason why so little had been imported, but he had no apprehension that the merchants of this country would not always be glad to receive silver and gold for their commodities, either as bullion or as coin. The course of trade was not to be obstructed by obstacles of this nature—There would be always a quantity of circulating medium adequate to the purposes of commerce—And there could never be more or less than that quantity for a long period.

Mr. BROOKES wished the committee might rise, in order to give time for consideration.

The question for rising was put and negatived 47 to 33.

Mr. MACON said it seemed to be the object of the friends of the mint to force the Foreign coin into the banks, and from thence into the mint; but they seemed to have lost sight of those parts of the country where there were no banks. There was no bank, he said, from Alexandria to Charleston, which embraced at least one-fifth part of the whole Union, yet nothing was said about this part of the country. Unless the law was postponed, great inconveniences would be experienced in these parts of the country, as there are more crowns in circulation than had been supposed. As to what coin had been issued from the mint, it was a mere trifle; it was scarcely equal to the expences of government, in the civil and military departments, for six months.

The question on the amendment proposed by Mr. Sitgreaves being put, it was negatived without a division.

Mr. NICHOLAS's amendment then returning for consideration,

Mr. VARNUM thought it would be best to move to suspend the operation of the second section of the act, as he had some doubts as to the propriety of the expression used in the resolution.

Mr. NICHOLAS acquiesced; and the question being put, it was carried without a division.

The committee then rose, the House agreed to the amendment, and a bill was ordered to be reported.

PHILADELPHIA,

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 18.

Last Saturday night arrived from Ireland Mr. Baxter, of this city, who left Cork on the 28th of October, in the brig Cincinnatus, (now at Reedy Island) and informs that 3 days previous to leaving Cork, intelligence was received of the total defeat of the Dutch fleet. He states, that while the British fleet under Admiral Duncan, were repairing in Yarmouth Roads, (who had left his station off the Texel for that purpose) a cutter brought him advice of the Dutch fleet being at sea, upon which the Admiral as soon as possible went out, and meeting the Dutch about the 17th of Oct. they were totally defeated—the Dutch Rear and Vice Admirals taken, with eight ships of the line; the remainder were pursued when the intelligence left the fleet. This news is without doubt true, as, on the day when Mr. Baxter left Cork, it was confirmed by an express from Admiral Duncan, which occasioned a royal salute to be fired by all the ships of war in the Cove.

Mr. Baxter has favoured us with papers to the 12th of October, the latest brought by the Cincinnatus; they contain no news, nor does our informant mention any intelligence from the Continent. (Amer. D. A.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman on his way home from this City, dated Snow-hill, Monday the 11th inst.

"I have nothing particular to add, only, that as I passed through Dover two men suffered sentence of the law, which made a strong impression on my mind—they were nailed by both ears to the pillory, and cut loose, leaving part of those members fast to the wood. One of them received thirty-nine lashes, the other, though condemned to the same punishment was excused by the Executive from that part of the sentence on supposition that he was unable to bear the lash; he had been previous to the trial by some means furnished with a file with which he cut off his hand cuffs, with the bar whereof he knocked down the Jailor and was making his escape, but being obstructed by an outer gate the Jailor came to himself, and in his turn gave the Prisoner a severe blow on the side by throwing an iron wedge at him, which laid him sprawling, and his life was at first despaired of—Now my Friend, I feel myself mortified that the human form should be thus mutilated, but yet I do think that cropping the ears is but a just and natural punishment where the offence is such as requires a mark to be set on the perpetrator to prevent similar practices. The crime they had committed was the most atrocious that can be committed by man against man, murder itself not excepted.

These Fellows had stolen three Negro Children in Kent County, whilst their Father was out at work, and they were actually put on board a Vessel to be carried to Carolina. The Father, Mother and Children all born free.

DEMARARA, OCT. 13, 1797.

TO CAPT. MAINWARING,
Of his Majesty's Ship Babet.

SIR,

We, the under signed masters of American vessels, with much pain, find ourselves under the disagreeable necessity of complaining of the usage we have received, and continue to receive from Lieutenant Mackie, commanding his Majesty's sloop George.—Immediately after his arrival in this river, he began to impress our seamen, some of whom he treated extremely ill, and what has been probably the most unpardonable part of his conduct, he has sanctioned his men under his own eye, to plunder our vessels and people; of which, proof sufficient can be given.—From the schooner Betsey, of Baltimore, two thirds of a barrel of beef was emptied into his boat and carried away; besides several other articles from other vessels, hams, onions, silver shoe buckles, razors, looking glasses, &c. have been taken.

Firmly relying on your goodness, as commanding officer, we have taken the liberty thus to state candidly to you, what we consider a grievance—and doubt not, but you will injoin such orders as may appear proper in this case. In the mean time, we consider ourselves solely under your protection; and several of us mean still further to claim it on the failing of the fleet, which we fondly hope, will not be denied us.

We are, Sir, yours,

John M'Dougall, William Patterson, John Compton, J. Smith, A. Cross.

This memorial was presented by John M'Dougal, and William Patterson, on board of the Babet; when orders was given to hoist the signal for the officers of the sloop George, which was immediately complied with; when the officers belonging to the said sloop George, came upon deck, the captain politely asked them and us below; and after having them severely reprimanded he ordered them on board, telling them to let lieut. Mackie know, from him, if he heard any more complaints of this, that he would put him under arrest, and send him to the admiral in Martinique—and if you have any Americans now on board, I desire you to deliver them up immediately.

Then addressing himself to us—Gentlemen I am sorry to hear of any such complaints—the latter part of your memorial shall be granted with pleasure; and as many of you as will be able to get ready to sail with the fleet, will receive your instructions outside of the bar.

To which we returned our hearty thanks to capt. Mainwaring.

On the 18*th Oct. the Commission passed a Decree which revokes and annuls the Decree of the* 21*st Dec. last. By this measure neutral vessels have liberty to go to or come from English ports, excepting to the ports which are in a state of rebellion against the Republic as well in St. Domingo, as in the windward Islands. By the same Decree, there is a Tribunal of prize causes established in the town of the Cape, composed of three Judges and a Secretary The Commission reserves to itself the power of ratifying or annulling the judgment rendered by the said Tribunal. Polonois, secretary to the Commission an the Cape, gave the above to Capt. Hillman, about a month since. and requested him to give it publicity.*

A letter from Cadiz, of a late date, mentions, that notwithstanding the hostile appearance of the British and Spanish fleets, an open communication between them was kept up, and that Ad. Massaredo, with his suite, had dined with Lord St. Vincents, on board the Ville de Paris.

BALTIMORE, December 14.

The ears of our citizens were last night, about 11 o'clock, for the first time this season; assailed with the din of Fire! Fire! which broke out in the stable of Mr. Lamotte, in the north western precincts of the city. Notwithstanding its distance and the contiguity of the stable to the dwelling, the exertions of the citizens saved every thing but the building which first caught, and a cow and horse which expired nearly as soon as the alarm was given. The fire was accidental, and arose, it is supposed, from the negligence of two boys who were that night in the stable, with a candle catching rats.

And as one accident generally accompanies another, we had as high a blaze, although no fire, in the upper part of market street. Mr. Clagett's house was endangered by placing a candle in the window, too near the curtains, which were consumed; and by throwing them into the fire place, set the chimney into a blaze. This should operate as a caution, in placing candles in the windows where there are curtains.

On it are one Blast and three Air Furnaces, a complete Boreing Machine, and a very good grist Mill, with two pair of stones; also a good Forge, all in perfect repair, as are all the Water Works connected with these various branches. The Cannon lately manufactured there, fully proves the excellency of the metal, which is superior to any in this country, and probably, equal to any in the world; for not one of sixty-nine guns lately made, although some of the 24 were bored into 32 pounders have failed on proving. The situation is very eligible, particularly for this branch of manufacture, and a place of arms lying in the state of Connecticut, and only 30 miles from several landings on the Hudson's river, and having every advantage that can result from a plenty of water issuing from a large natural pond, very near the Furnace, and which may be converted into a variety of other useful purposes. English Grammar,

The second edition, with improvements,

ADAPTED to the different classes of learners; with an appendix, containing rules and observations for assisting the more advanced students to write with perspicuity and accuracy,

By LINDLEY MURRAY.

"This is a publication of much merit, and fully answers the professions in the Title. The appendix contains some of the best rules for writing elegantly, and with propriety, that we recollect to have seen."

Monthly Review, July 1796.

"This Grammar is, on many accounts entitled to commendatory notice, its materials have been carefully and judiciously selected; its arrangement is distinct and well adapted to the purpose of instruction and its expression is simple, perspicuous and accurate, &c."

See the character at large in the Analytical Review, July 1796

English Exercises,

Adapted to the Grammar lately published by Lindley Murray, consisting of exemplification of the parts of speech, instances of false orthography, violations of the rules of syntax, defects in punctuation, and violations of the rules respecting perspicuity and accuracy, designed for the benefit of private learners, as well as for the use of schools.

"We have been much pleased with the perusal of these Exercises. They occupy with distinguished excellence a most important place in the science of the English language; and as such, we can warmly recommend them to the Teachers of Schools, as well as to all those who are desirous of attaining correctness and precision in their native tongue."

Monthly Review, July 1797.

The Norfolk Mail STAGE.

THIS Stage starts from the GEORGE Tavern, at the corner of Second and Arch Streets, in Philadelphia, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at 3 o'clock, in the morning; arrives at Dover the first day, at Snowhill the second day, at Northampton Court House the third day, and on the morning of the fourth day the passengers find a safe and comfortable packet to convey them to Norfolk.

A packet leaves Norfolk for Northampton ferry, every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and the Stage starts from this ferry for Philadelphia, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday; puts up at Snow Hill the first night, at Dover the 2d night, and arrives in Philadelphia in the evening of the third day.

The distance on this route, between Philadelphia and Norfolk, is 30 miles less than on any stage route between those places.

Too much cannot be said in favor of the road, which is most excellent indeed. The proprietors willingly engage to return the whole fare to any passenger, who, after having performed this route, will say that he ever travelled in a stage for the same distance, so good a road in America.

PEALE'S MUSEUM.

THIS valuable repository of the works of Nature, so well calculated to delight the mind and enlarge the understanding, is opened daily, as usual. It stands in an airy and healthy situation, and free from the epidemic that at present afflicts the city; it may, therefore, be frequented with the greatest safety.

As an Amusement, the study of Nature is the most rational and pleasing: as a Science, the most sublime and instructive. It elevates the mind and expands the heart. They

"Whom Nature's works can charm, with God himself

Many interesting additions have lately been made to this Museum: and the feathered tribe, containing a variety of the most rare and beautiful subjects, is now very advantageously arranged. Waxen Figures, of Men large as life (some of them casts from nature) are here dressed in their proper habits, and placed in attitudes characteristic of their respective nations. Here may be seen the North-American Savage, and the Savage of South-America—a laboring Chinese, and the Chinese Gentleman—the sooty African, and the Kamtschadale—with some Natives of the South Sea Islands. The immense variety and interesting diversity which this Museum offers to the view, may be seen but cannot be described with full effect.
